

Black History Month Panel

To celebrate Black History Month, the Pro Football Hall of Fame is offering a special videoconference panel discussion, featuring former NFL players, for high school students. During the discussion, the players will talk about their life experiences and some of the trials they overcame to reach their goals. The seminar will take place February 12-13, 2009, and will be offered two times each day (schools only need to sign up for one timeslot). The goal of the discussion is to help students understand the contributions of African American football pioneers. The Pro Football Hall of Fame is also offering some supplemental activities for the students to enhance their learning experience. For more information about this program, visit http://www.profootballhof.com/hall/story.jsp?story_id=2290.

While there is typically a $35 fee to participate via teleconferencing, the Hall of Fame is waiving that fee for any high school that signs up through the Indianapolis Colts. If your school is interested in participating in this panel discussion via teleconferencing, please e-mail the Indianapolis Colts at community.relations@colts.nfl.net.
